

How to get started with the administrative approach

Governments can help fight organised crime with the administrative approach, but how to get started? By looking at success stories from Member States, we created a clear roadmap:

1. Take stock of available instruments

Make an inventory of the many administrative elements that are useful in the fight against organised crime.

2. Put into practice what you can

Once an inventory of available instruments has been prepared, the next step is to take action.

3. Spread the word at local level

By bringing together relevant partners and services, an understanding of the impact of organised crime on local policy is generated.

4. Set up an organisational structure with partners

Potential partners with relevant competences, tools and information must be identified and cooperation with them must be sought and coordinated.

5. Ensure a strong information position

By putting together the different pieces of information that different partners have, it is possible to achieve a richer intelligence picture.

6. Set up joint actions on the ground

A multidisciplinary cooperation is not limited to a joint strategy or the sharing of information, but it is also important to set up coordinated joint inspection.

These six steps lead the way to a successful administrative approach.

Read the full paper at: www.administrativeapproach.eu

